FOREWORD

Demographic investigations in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics have been started on a comprehensive scale only recently. In the course of this development the demographers at the DBS have prepared a bibliography for their own use. It might be useful to demographers elsewhere and social scientists in related fields to have access to this collection of references.

The bibliography is part of an information system which the demographers work for their own use and consists of a collection of flexible reference cards which can be and are used for other purposes as well.

Two or three preliminary editions of this bibliography have been produced and distributed in limited quantities among interested parties. Our thanks are due to those who commented upon them. However, all faults and omissions remain the responsibility of the authors. Although the bibliography is being made available by the DBS the responsibility for it and its layout is that of the authors and other researchers who contributed to it. They do not necessarily reflect the views and practices of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

PREFACE

The primary intent of this bibliography on Canadian demography is to bring together under one cover references to literature related to the study of population and population problems. The coverage of the literature in this area has been extensive though not necessarily exhaustive, covering the period from the early 1900's through 1965, and partially into 1966. Its function is to present a reference tool to those individuals who are involved in the study of demographic analysis and related areas, pertinent to Canada.

For the purpose of this publication, demography is defined as the study of population change in terms of the components of change - i.e. birth, death, and migration. As the emphasis is placed on the variation of these and related variables, account is taken of differences in characteristics such as geographic location, age, sex, marital status, race, nationality, education, economic activity and income. This is a very broad and general treatment of demography, therefore, demographic analysis is not the only concern. Rather, the treatment has encompassed relationships between demographic variables and characteristics of interest to other disciplines; such as social, economic, political, geographic, historical, ecological and biological.

The sources used in the preparation of this work are listed at the end of the bibliography. It is sufficient to say here that the selection of titles to be included was achieved by examining sources first hand and searching standard as well as lesser known bibliographic sources in the field. One special aspect of this particular work is the inclusion of unpublished material and work that is presently in progress. The latter was selected only after it was determined that the completed product would be ready for use by others in a relatively short period of time. In the cases of incomplete works and unpublished materials, the organizational or institutional affiliation of the author has been given. This should enable any interested individual to contact the author directly regarding a particular piece of literature.

This bibliography is divided into two sections. The first section contains an alphabetical arrangement of the references by author. There is space for annotations beneath each reference by owners of copies of this bibliography. Each reference is preceded by a unique "code" consisting usually of the name of the author and year of publication. These "codes" as well as the actual form of the references are part of a wider information system in use by professionals in the Census (Demography) Division of DBS. They facilitate manipulations with voluminous sources, such as instant production of bibliographies on selected topics of research, timely production of references to articles without typing and proofreading, painless expansion of investigations with new sources and rearrangement of old ones, consistent and mnemonically useful referring to sources in a way which gives rise to no footnotes.

The second section of the bibliography contains an arrangement of the same references by subject area. This second arrangement of the references by subject matter has two notable advantages. First of all, it facilitates the task of searching through a long list of references, for references on a select aspect of Canadian demography, by providing a handy list (which gives only the author surname and year code of each pertinent reference) for the particular subject area classifications indicated. Additional details for each reference can be referred to within the first section. Secondly, this particular arrangement allows for a title that treats more than one subject area to be found easily under the various appropriate subject area headings.

There has been no language limitation imposed on the selection of titles. In the case of French and English listings, no attempt has been made to translate either the titles or bibliographic information. Titles in other languages, however, are given in the original with an English translation following in brackets.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Many persons have contributed in the preparation of this project. Particular acknowledgement is made here to those persons who had a major role in its materialization. Mr. B.A. Ower, Head Librarian, and Miss Rowinski, both of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics Library assisted in locating fugitive literature. Dr. Ian C. Wees and Miss F. Paterson, both of the National Research Library in Ottawa helped in verifying various references. Mr. A. Hopkins, Census Division provided both technical assistance and clerical support during the revision of the draft bibliography. Dr. Leroy O. Stone, Census Division, served throughout as a consultant in the selection of titles and helped in the identification of sources. Dr. Karol J. Krótki, Assistant Director (Research) Census Division conceived of the project in its present form, provided guidance on the general procedure and the progress of the work.

Martha B. Stone and George J.V. Kokich

Note about the authors

Mrs. Martha B. Stone is a librarian with the Department of Finance in Ottawa. George J.V. Kokich is a geographer with the Census Division's Geography Section of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in Ottawa.

FOOTNOTES

- (1) Roughly the same as Population Index "Regional Demography".
- (2) Same heading as Population Index, but unlike the Index, entries in this section should be confined to field surveys.
- (3) Population Index uses "Past trends".
- (4) Not in Population Index.
- (5) There are no references in this bibliography that are classified according to this subject heading.
